WHAT IT IS

AN INSPECTION, ON YOUR SCHEDULE.

- You hire a licensed home inspector before the home goes on the market
- NC and SC both license home inspectors
- It's a snapshot of the home's condition, not a warranty

WHY IT HELPS

FEWER SURPRISES AFTER THE OFFER.

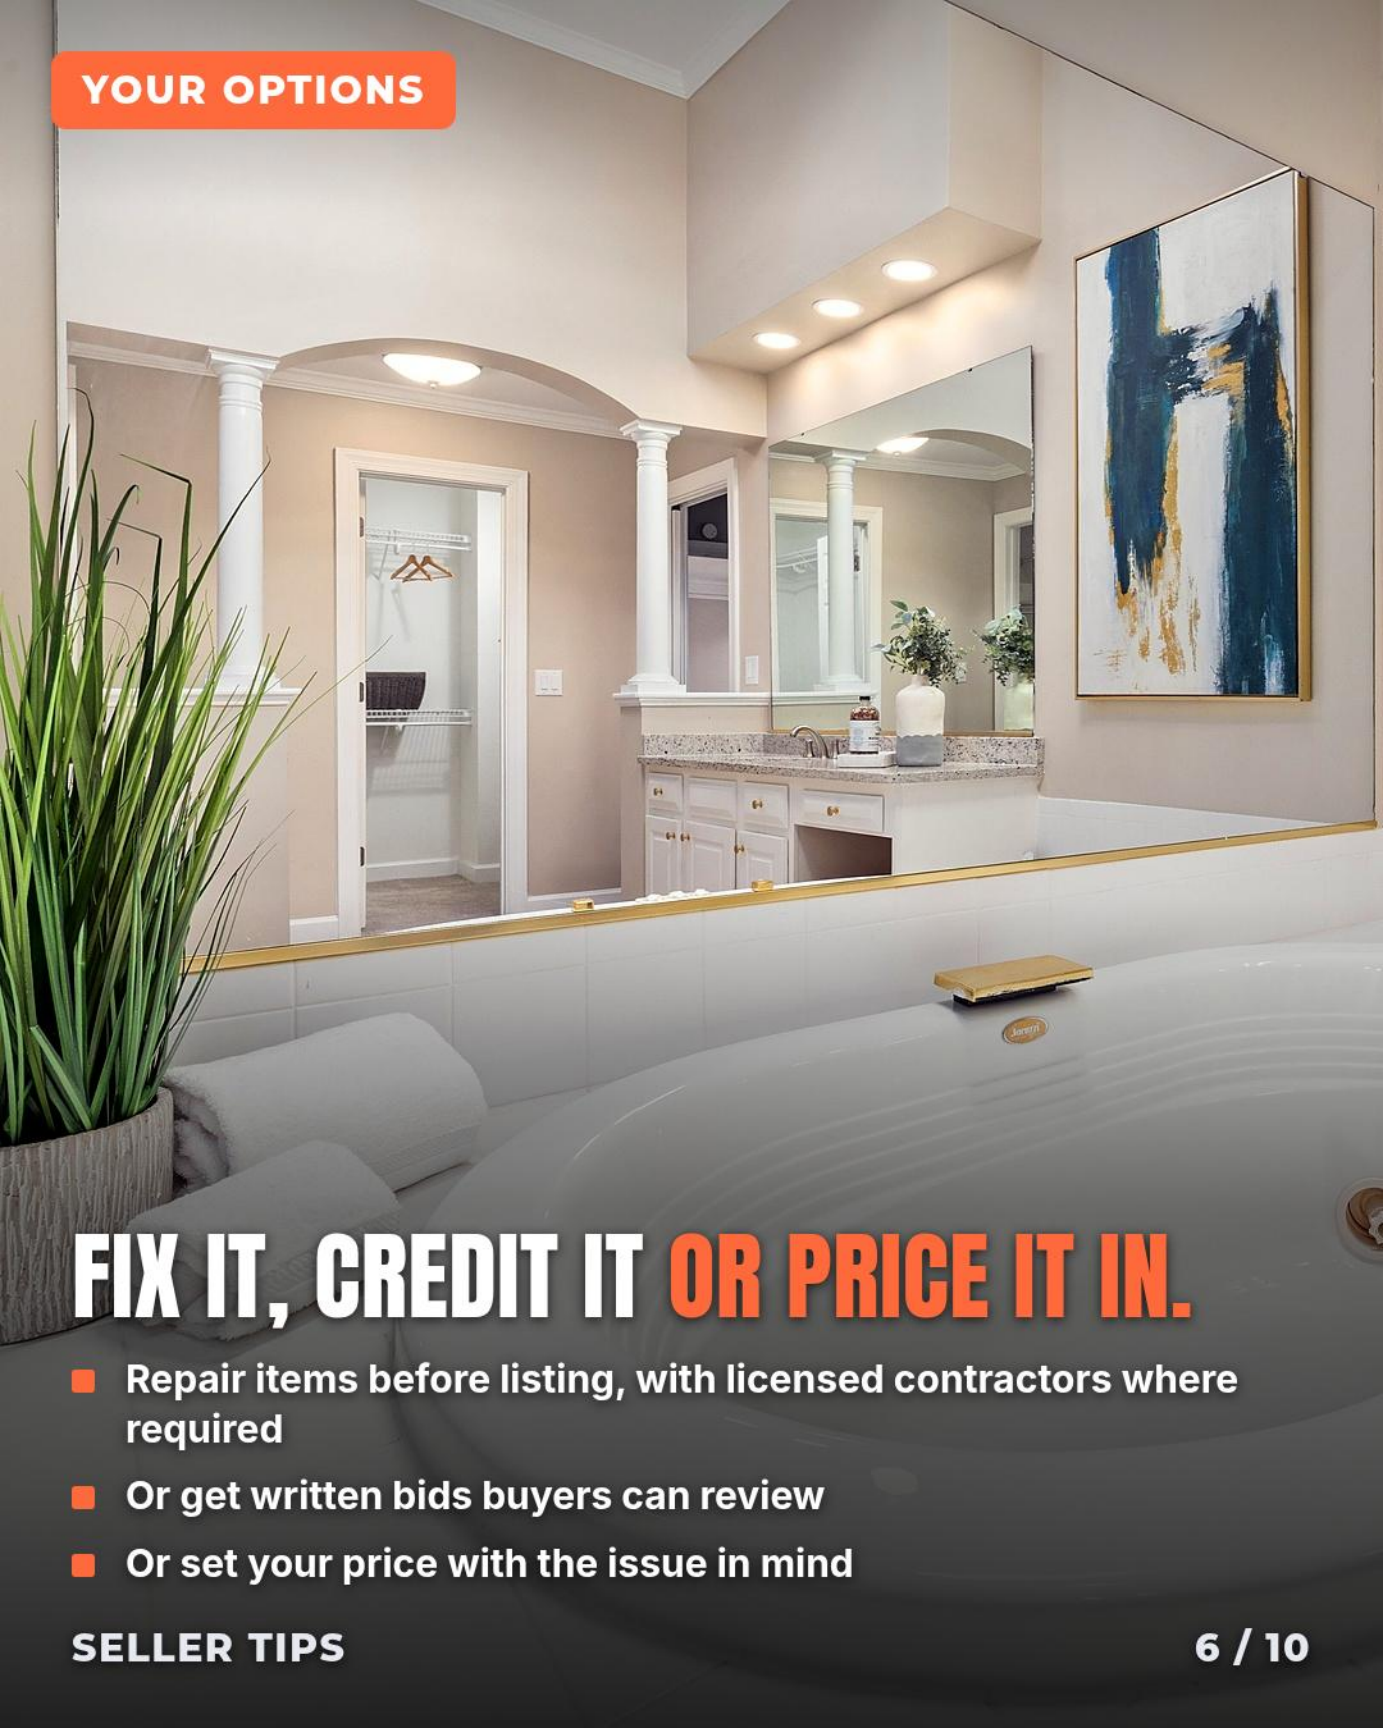

- Buyers usually hire their own inspector once you're under contract
- Finding issues first gives you time to get repair bids
- You get to plan instead of reacting on a deadline

START WITH THE BIG SYSTEMS.

- Roof, foundation and other structural parts
- Heating, cooling, plumbing and electrical
- These are items NC and SC disclosure forms ask about too

YOUR OPTIONS

FIX IT, CREDIT IT OR PRICE IT IN.

- Repair items before listing, with licensed contractors where required
- Or get written bids buyers can review
- Or set your price with the issue in mind

DISCLOSURE

ONCE YOU KNOW, IT COUNTS.

- NC and SC disclosure forms ask what the owner actually knows
- In NC, brokers must disclose material facts they know, whatever the form says
- Ask a real estate attorney how a report affects your disclosures

SHARE IT
CONSIDER SHARING THE REPORT.
NC law lets an owner attach a home inspector's written report to the disclosure statement
It also limits an owner's liability for errors in that report when the owner reasonably relied on it
Keep receipts and warranties for any repairs you make

BUYERS STILL LOOK

IT DOESN'T REPLACE THE BUYER'S INSPECTION.

- Buyers can still hire their own inspector
- SC law keeps the buyer's duty to inspect the property
- NC's disclosure form tells buyers it isn't a substitute for inspections

MY RECOMMENDATION

KNOW FIRST, THEN LIST.

I recommend considering a pre-listing inspection, because it lets you decide on repairs, price and disclosures with time to think, not on a buyer's deadline. For legal questions about your disclosures, talk with a real estate attorney.
